Data, Data, Everywhere! Dr. Michele Intermont, Kalamazoo College

Abstract:

Everywhere we look these days there seem to be huge piles of data being generated. People collect this data, but how does it get analyzed? Recently, people have begun looking at the branch of mathematics known as topology to help organize and give some shape to data. Applied topology is still a new field, and in this talk, we'll give an introduction to it as well as to topology itself, and talk a little bit about research in progress in applying some of these ideas to biological questions.
